John Pfeiffer's attempt to create a new government surveillance agency has inspired retired Lt. Colonel Marven Goodman to step up to defeat Pfeiffer and his big government plans

For retired Lt. Colonel Marven Goodman, watching our state legislator write "dangerous" legislation to "bring George Orwell's surveillance state to Oklahoma," was the last straw.

Goodman's state representative, John Pfeiffer was completing his 9th year in office when he sponsored House Bill 3542.

Pfeiffer's bill builds on a public surveillance project, initially created by a 2007 executive order of former Governor Brad Henry, and expands it into a new government agency charged with monitoring and watching over various communications of, and serving as an information clearinghouse on the actions of, Oklahoma's citizens.

The new government bureaucracy will be known as the "Oklahoma Fusion Center." Pfeiffer charges it with the mission of consolidating data on "suspicious activities" that occur in Oklahoma.

Pfeiffer also wants to change the oversight model of the surveillance center.

Instead of being housed inside of the Department of Public Safety, where the center is overseen by the direct appointee of the Governor, who is elected by the people, a twelve-person board of unelected appointees will have the power of oversight.

This includes three board members who are from Indian tribes, groups that sometimes consider themselves to be separate nations.

Four other members of the board will be appointed by private police associations.

These associations are not elected by the public.

They are private associations, yet they will now be responsible for appointing four of the board members who will be in charge of the public surveillance operations.

This means there will be little recourse to the citizens against the surveillance center.

Tom Coburn's Findings

Disturbingly, the fusion center surveillance project already has a history of controversy.

In 2012, Oklahoma Senator Tom Coburn served as the minority ranking member on a Senate committee to analyze what exactly was going on with these govern-

AN APP FOR SNITCHING

In 2020, as the COVID crisis and 2020 election fraud unfolded and the left took away our rights and liberties, and trampled on the 1st Amendment, Oklahoma Fusion Center officials announced the release of SeeSayOk, an anonymous reporting smartphone app enabling people to secretly report on each other. Instead of addressing this overreach and dismantling the Fusion Center, John Pfeiffer is attempting to transform it into a free-standing, statutory bureaucracy. Governed by a board of unelected bureaucrats and likely funded by Biden Administration deep state dollars, it would be poised to wreak havoc on our freedoms and privacy in ways that we can only now imagine.

That committee produced a report that was extremely critical of the fusion centers and stated:

"The Subcommittee investigation found that DHS-assigned details to the fusion centers forwarded 'intelligence' of uneven quality — oftentimes shoddy, rarely timely, sometimes endangering citizens' civil liberties and Privacy Act protections, occasionally taken from already-published sources and more often than not unrelated to terrorism."

Ironically, for all the risks of infringing on our privacy, the fusion centers were found to have possibly

REAL REPUBLICANS DON'T CREATE NEW STATE BUREAUCRACIES

After retiring from the military, Marven Goodman stepped up to serve as a County Commissioner.

He was the Chairman of the Board of Commissioners during the COVID-19 crisis of 2020.

When the health department and emergency management approached Marven about implementing contact tracing in Logan County, Marven stood firm in defense of our Constitutional liberties, ensuring that this government tracking would not be implemented by the local government.

Marven knew the dangerous precedent that would be set if the government was given the ability to trace its citizens.

Under his leadership, the county maintained what Marven called, "The Logan County Freedom Zone," an area of freedom from the insanity that was gripping our nation.

This stands in stark contrast to John Pfeiffer, whose legislation would create an entirely new state agency with the express mission of spying on citizens. Worse, the agency created by Pfeiffer would be an expansion of the fusion center which, as demonstrated by the fusion center's slide, that's pictured above, was at the heart of the COVID surveillance state.

Marven knows that the public safety sector is already awash in acronym soup, as numerous local, state, and federal agencies have already been given police powers.

According to Marven, 'There's simply no good reason to create yet another one.'

Real Republicans do not create new bureaucracies. He wants to eliminate and consolidate bureaucracies, not create new ones.

hindered, not aided, actual counterterrorism response.

The Senate's investigation could identify no example in which a fusion center uncovered a terrorist threat, nor could it identify an instance when fusion center reporting helped disrupt an active terrorist plot.

Instead, the Senate report did find significant examples of government waste including dozens of flat-screen TVs; Sport Utility Vehicles they then gave away to other government agencies; hidden "shirt button" cameras, cell phone tracking devices, and other surveillance equipment unrelated to the analytical mission of a fusion center.

POLICE STATE

Oklahoma Senator Tom Coburn served as the ranking minority member on the U.S. Senate committee that produced a 141-page report about fusion centers. The report harshly criticized the privacy rights abuses and stated that the fusion centers waste money. The report's disclosures received widespread coverage in the media, as illustrated by the story pictured below. Despite these facts, our State Representative, John Pfeiffer, is attempting to create an entirely new state agency from the state's fusion centers. This wasteful endeavor could potentially have far-reaching consequences on our freedoms and liberties that we are only now beginning to imagine.

statutory bureaucracy that can no longer be repealed by a simple executive order from the governor.

"Republicans are supposed to shrink government, not grow it; and certainly not grow the programs that have proven to infringe on our liberties."

I didn't serve our state and nation just to stand by and watch immature, foolish politicians destroy the freedoms we have all worked so hard to preserve

Goodman suggests that after nine years in office, Pfeiffer likely believes himself to be untouchable, able to get away with any proposal no matter how out of touch with the values of local voters.

"It is my sincere and honest belief that the vast majority of those of us who live in this district would never support the creation of a new government agency with the mission of spying on the taxpayers.

I didn't serve our state and nation just to stand by and watch immature, foolish politicians destroy the freedoms we have all worked so hard to preserve.

I am once again stepping up to do my part to preserve our freedoms.

I am asking all fellow voters to help me, by standing up and voting John Pfeiffer out of office on June 18th.

When we do, we will send a message to freedom-destroying government tyrants everywhere,

'We are not going to allow you to do this in Oklahoma!'

If we fail to step up and do this, history will record that it was our generation who gave up the freedoms for which so many sacrificed so greatly."

WASHINGTON — A multibillion-dollar information-sharing program created in the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks has improperly collected information about innocent Americans and produced little valuable intelligence on terrorism, a U.S. Senate report concludes. It portrays an effort that ballooned far beyond anyone's ability to control.

What began as an attempt to put local, state and federal officials in the same room analyzing the same intelligence has instead cost huge amounts of money for data-mining software, flat-screen televisions and, in Arizona, two fully equipped Chevrolet Tahoes that are used for commuting, investigators found.

The lengthy, bipartisan report is a scathing evaluation of what the Department of Homeland center as a conduit to other government agencies, presumably to include the controversial FBI and ATF, and even to foreign government agencies.

If correct, this means the fusion centers could be acting to launder surveillance from local law enforcement license plate scanners, to entities that have little to no accountability to local voters.

Goodman says that this isn't the type of thing voters expected when they voted for Republicans.

He asserts that once a Democratic governor created this project, this is the type of thing Republicans were supposed to do away with once they came to power; and yet, both Fallin and Stitt allowed it to stay around and haunt state government.

Now Pfeiffer is going to take it to the next level and make it into a full-blown

In another particularly embarrassing instance of abuse, a fusion center falsely attributed an "attack" to Russian hackers, when in fact, the person involved was an authorized employee who was accessing a system remotely, while on vacation.

Essentially, the Senate's report painted a picture of massive government waste, including the spending money on frivolous items such as vehicles, that violated the privacy rights of Americans, with little to show in terms of benefit to the security of the country.

It Gets Worse

Earlier this year, an Oklahoma State Senator, when debating against Senate Bill 1620, a bill that would allow police departments to automatically scan all passing traffic, theorized that the surveillance data would be passed through the fusion

DUTY CALLS

Marven Goodman grew up in a blue-collar family where plumbing was the family business. Marven's grandfather and namesake, Marven Holdeman, owned Enid Plumbing.

At 14, Goodman went to work as a dishwasher at Polly and Peggy's Cafe. Goodman played football on the Carrier high school team where, in 1973, he was a member of the school's last ever graduating class.

That year, he joined the United States Marine Corps, where he would be promoted to Corporal and specialize in avionics. In 1977, he transferred to the Army/Army National Guard, was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and General Staff Officer G6 status.

He served as the Chief Information Officer (CIO) for the Oklahoma Military Department and was assigned duties as a Contracting Officer's Technical Representative (COTR) where he was responsible for overseeing up to a 4 million dollar combined State and Federal annual budget.

During that time, he functioned as the liaison to local government emergency operation centers (EOCs) and as the officer in charge of Oklahoma National Guard troops on the ground to assist local authorities with heavy equipment, transportation, water, and physical security at disaster sites.

Goodman earned the Humanitarian Service Medal for his work running the Guard's Emergency Operations Center (EOC) shift during the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing, where he was responsible for coordination between the Governor's office and FEMA.

As the CIO, Goodman led the Guard's communications leading up to the Y2K event. This included testifying on the State House floor as part of a preparedness hearing by a joint House and Senate committee.

Goodman left the military in 2000 and entered the private sector where he oversaw network security for Hertz and the public sector IT security operations at EDS.

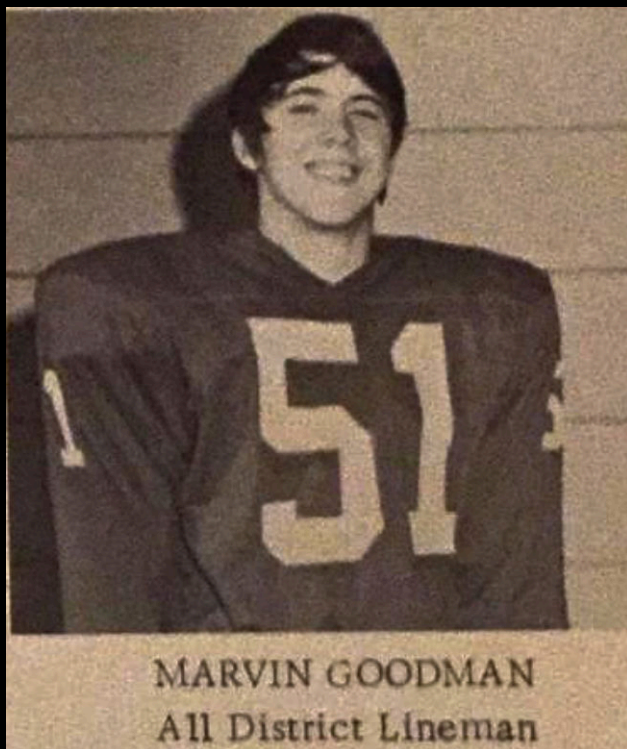

In 2012, Goodman formed Patriot's Republic and opened a gun shop in Crescent, Oklahoma.

Goodman planned to live an easy-going life as an entrepreneur in rural Oklahoma.

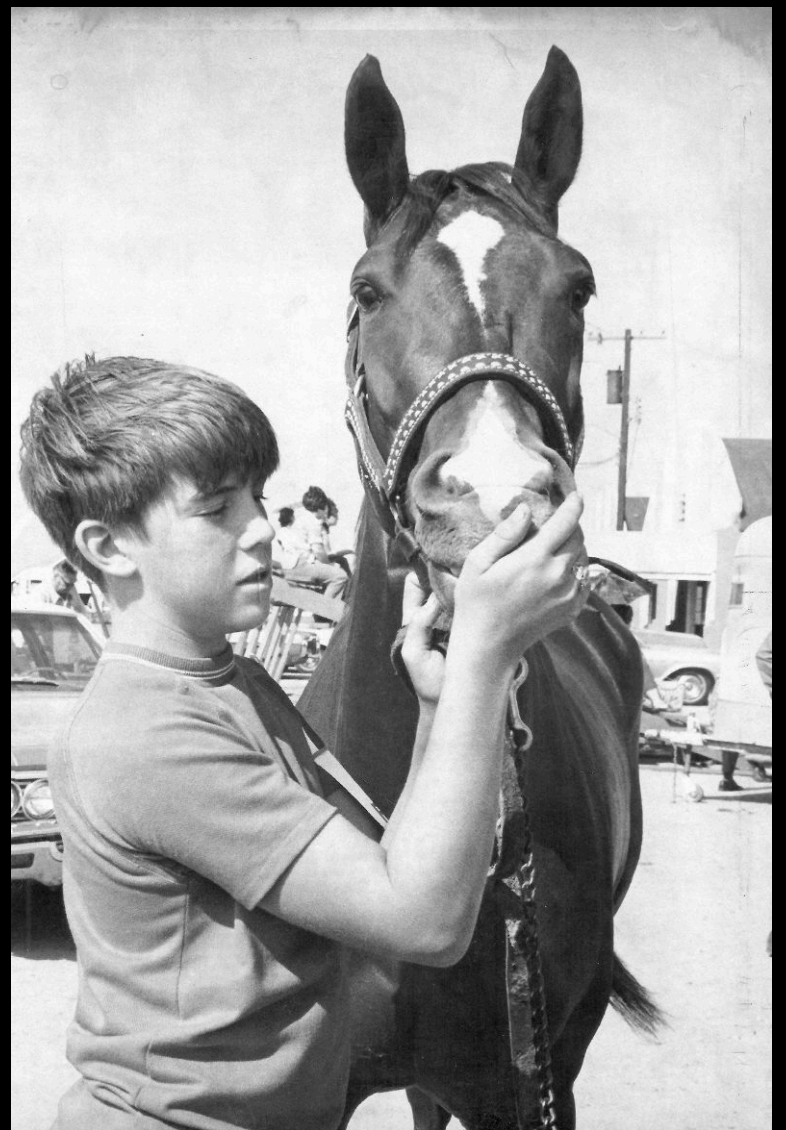

He had just opened his own small business, Patriot's

Then, it happened: the call to serve.

Goodman became aware of his County Commissioner's effort to authorize a Tax Increment Financing (TIF) District.

Goodman instinctively knew this was wrong.

TIF districts create holes in the property and sales tax code, much like how monied special interests have riddled the income tax code with many loopholes that allow those with the means to hire lawyers and accountants to escape paying millions in taxes while those without means are not afforded the same special favors.

Once these districts are formed, the lawyers and bond underwriters make bank as they issue massive debt to finance infrastructure that immediately improves the values of the developer's property who is applying for the district.

This puts local politicians in the business of deciding which developer gets the special favor of the TIF districts and which do not.

All in all, it's bad policy that allows a privileged few to receive benefits that many others do not, and it empowers local politicians with the ability to determine the winners and losers of the free market.

Goodman attempted to raise this point of concern with the local commissioner. That commissioner arrogantly dismissed Goodman's concerns.

Goodman observed that the commissioner appeared to relish wielding the power to award TIF districts to the powerful special interest that would benefit, and it was clear that once the first district was formed, there was likely to be more of this abuse; indeed, soon thereafter, a powerful, monied special interest was gearing up for a 2nd, large TIF district to develop a massive private land project.

Goodman knew that he had to do something.

He realized that by approving the first TIF district, the incumbent commissioner had opened Pandora's box on this dangerous policy.

He didn't want to see what he viewed as "legalized corruption" brought to his local county.

He filed to run against the TIF-supporting commissioner. Few gave Goodman any chance. The incumbent had been ensconced for 12 long years and had won previous elections by a large margin.

But that didn't deter Goodman; no one else was stepping up. He went door-to-door exposing the abuse and on election day, Goodman pulled off one of the greatest upsets in the modern-day history of the county.

And then, even more importantly, after Goodman took his oath of office, he didn't change.

He kept his word and shut down all future TIF district proposals, even though the monied special interest that would have benefited from the massive new TIF district became involved in financing local races, including financing a campaign against Goodman.

For eight years, Goodman stood up to these powers and successfully stopped the TIF proposals.

And that massive project that was being considered for a TIF district?

It was developed anyway, without any special favors from the commissioners, thus proving that the free market works, and if the free market supports development, it will occur without any special favors from the government.

In 2023, Goodman left office, having done his part to keep the county free from this inappropriate and dangerous form of government influence in the market.

Goodman served through the COVID crisis, where he was known for keeping the county open in what he would call, "The Logan County Freedom Zone."

He also won approval for changing county policy to allow county employees to carry their handguns while on duty.

Now, once again, upon seeing dangerous policies from a long-term incumbent, this time it's State Representative John Pfeiffer, Goodman is stepping up to do his part.

He is ready to once again step into the void that's not being filled by anyone else.

He knows that 10-year incumbent John Pfeiffer does not represent our values and he knows that the voters need to have the option of changing course.

No other Republican filed to challenge Pfeiffer, so Goodman is going to do his part to ensure that voters have the opportunity to change course and to elect someone who actually represents their values.

Just as Goodman refused to benefit from special interests while serving as county commissioner, he will also refuse to take money from lobbyists and their employers while serving as state representative.

This will again keep him completely free of the taint that destroys so many elected officials.

Now, it's up to you: will you join with Goodman and step up to defend our liberties and freedoms on June 18th?

"PURE DECADENCE:" THERE WILL BE NO $113 LOBBYIST-FUNDED RANCH STEAKHOUSE DINNERS FOR MARVEN GOODMAN.

Here's the dynamic: Lobbyists fund lavish nights out with legislators at some of Oklahoma City's finest restaurants and entertainment venues.

These outings forge strong bonds between lobbyists and politicians, relationships the average voter can't compete with as they go about their everyday lives, far removed from political maneuvering in the capital city.

After establishing this rapport, lobbyists channel thousands of dollars into the campaign coffers of their new political allies.

These politicians then use the money to convince voters they still align with constituents' values, when in reality, they often represent the views of their new lobbyist connections and friends.

Case in point: John Pfeiffer.

John Pfeiffer has been in office for 10 long years. During that time, he has taken many thousands of dollars from lobbyists and their employers. He's had thousands more spent on gifts, his dining tab, and entertainment venues. He once ran up a tab of $113 at the exclusive Ranch Steakhouse, paid for, of course, by a lobbyist who represented insurance interests.

He will almost certainly use the special interest money to flood our mailboxes with declarations of his "conservatism."

A man can not serve two masters.

But, according to The Oklahoma Constitution, which is Oklahoma's gold standard for judging the conservative votes, or lack thereof, of Oklahoma legislators, John Pfeiffer has an average conservative voting score of just 55 percent.

Marven Goodman knows that these two things are related. A man cannot serve two masters.

When a lawmaker decides to wine and dine with the lobbyists and allow them to fund his political campaign account, he's naturally going to put a high value on what those lobbyists want and desire; and, unfortunately, many of them want big government to act on their behalf.

There's really only one solution: we, as a people, must only elect those who understand this conflict of interests and who will practice 100% abstinence from the very appearance of a conflict of interests.

In other words, we can't vote for those who take this money.

It's the best explanation for why so many "Republican" legislators so consistently betray our values.

Marven Goodman is making an exceptional commitment. If elected, he will do our district proud; he will be one of the very few to refuse this money, money that is customarily given to legislative incumbents, thousands and thousands of dollars.

With him as our representative, we can take great pride in the fact that we are setting an example for the rest of the state to follow.

That's what is on the ballot on June 18th: the re-election of John Pfeiffer to his sixth term of office, a politician with a proven record of voting

Marven Goodman says John Pfeiffer's $113 lobbyist-funded dinner tab at the Exclusive Ranch Steakhouse in Oklahoma City explains everything. pearance of a conflict of interest and who will actually vote according to our values.

Republican in Name Only (RINO): Oklahoma's Conservative Index Unmasks John Pfeiffer and the Legislature's Liberal Trend

The year was 1978. A group of conservative Oklahoma Republicans were extremely frustrated because once again, liberal Democrats had defeated them in the 1978 midterm elections.

Those Republicans knew that the Democrats were liberals, but they felt the Democrats were deceiving the voters and tricking them into thinking that they were not liberals. This was deception!

Those Republicans decided that they needed to do something about it.

Their solution?

They created what would become Oklahoma's gold standard for holding politicians accountable for their votes. Known as The Oklahoma Conservative Index, the system has graded every Oklahoma legislator ever since. Now, years later, much has changed.

No longer is it the Democrats who are pretending to be conservative.

Now, it's the Republicans!

Alarming, in the past few years, the index has tracked Republicans as they have moved dramatically leftward.

In 2023, even though our district is very conservative, the Index showed that our representative, John Pfeiffer, had dropped down to voting conservative just 43 percent of the time, in essence, in 2023 he was more liberal than conservative.

The Index now shows that Pfeiffer's lifetime score, a measurement of his conservatism across all the years he's been in office, now ranks just 55.

Upon releasing this year's index, one of the editors of the Constitution published an editorial entitled "Republican In Name Only (RINO)."

In that editorial, Ron McWhirter explained, "Viewed as a whole, the Oklahoma Legislature is now more liberal than it is conservative. Prior to this year, the opposite was true.

Indeed, over the last several years, the Legislature has been drifting steadily leftward, and the rapidly growing problem in the Legislature is the Republican In Name Only (RINO) members of the majority party.

They make up a significant, and growing, segment of the Republicans in the Legislature.

In the past, these moderate Republicans would probably have been registered Democrats.

Today, they masquerade as Republicans because they could not get elected otherwise."

Marven Goodman knows that these liberal-voting Republicans, when they are campaigning, often present themselves as conservatives, but then, after they are elected, they cast many liberal votes.

"I suggest that Pfeiffer

Conservative State Leader Raps Government 'Reform'

A 1985 article from The Oklahoman captures an editor of The Oklahoma Constitution in action. Established following the Republican losses in the 1978 midterms, The Constitution's Conservative Index is now regarded as the definitive measure of Oklahoma legislators' performance. The latest index assigned John Pfeiffer a conservative rating of only 43%, despite his representation of one of the state's most conservative districts.

and many other liberal-voting Republican legislators are taking advantage of the hopeful spirit and trusting nature of Republican voters, and we have to step up and bring it to an immediate stop.

House District 38 is a very conservative district and we deserve to have a state representative who is, actually a conservative."

The Oklahoma Conservative Index is online at OklahomaConstitution.com.

Killing Sacred Cows: Marven Goodman's Bold, Uncompromising Stance

Marven Goodman won't be afraid to challenge the sacred cows that many legislators won't touch.

He will aggressively pursue the complete removal of funding from universities that spend our money on costly and unnecessary DEI programs, and are killing their students with massive amounts of debt.

You won't find anyone stronger in the defense of the 2nd Amendment and states' rights than Goodman.

A former gun shop owner, he will not only support 2nd Amendment legislation but will assert states' rights as he stands strong against the unaccountable FBI and ATF actions against law abiding citizens.

Return the toll roads to the people: Toll roads are good for the bond industry, but not for the people. Each year the state raids millions from the motor vehicle registration fees for purposes other than transportation.

This money should be spent on roads and freeing the turnpikes.

Goodman will lead the way in making Oklahoma a no-go state for illegal invaders of our nation. Recent court rulings have allowed the states to begin enforcing immigration laws and that's what we must do.

Allow the people to vote on the direct appointment of judges.

Currently, an unelected board nominates the state's appellate judges. This means that too often the judges likely do not represent the values of the people.

This has to change.

When you go to court, you need to know that the judge shares our values of originalism, limiting the power of the state, and fair justice for all.

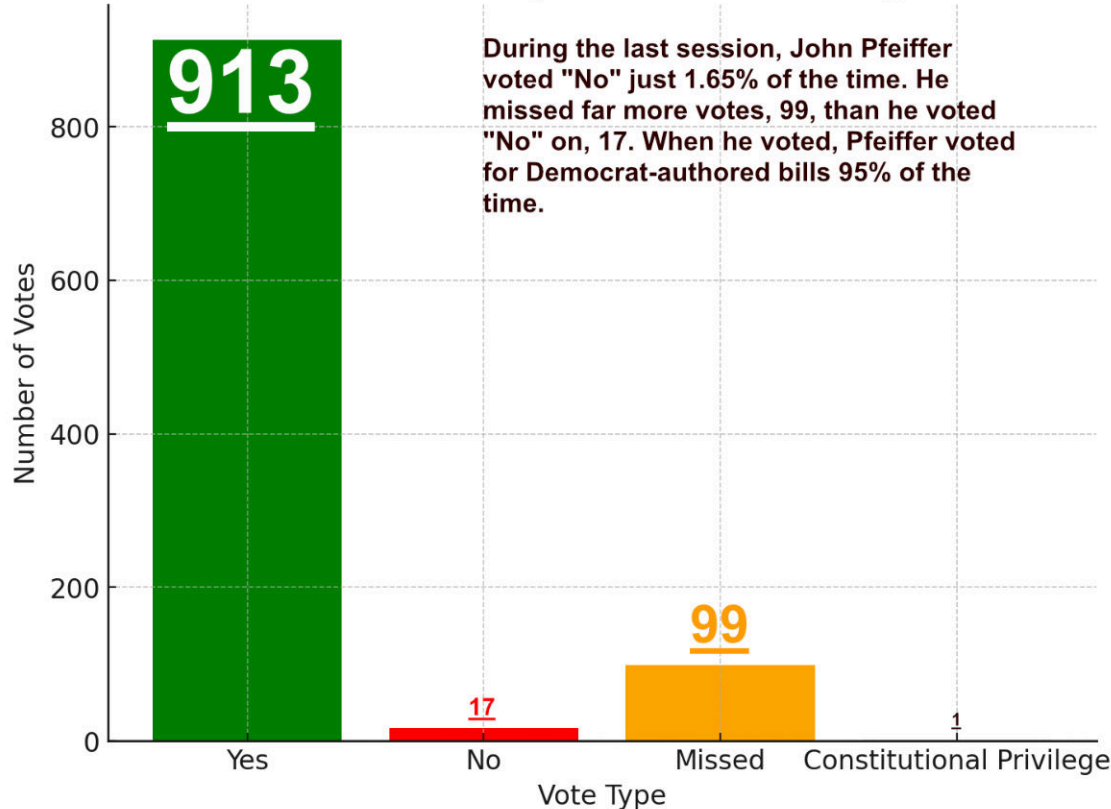

The last thing you want is to find yourself stuck in court before an unjust partisan, leftist ideologue who's actively seeking to destroy the impartial rule of law in our nation.

Oppose all that's woke: Our society is being torn apart by the barbarism of the woke agenda.

Goodman believes our education system must focus on the basics of hard work, intense study, traditional values, and protecting the innocence of our youth.

A TOWER OF GREEN

The Tower of Green: John Pfeiffer's Voting Record

Legislators cast approximately 1000 votes every year.

Many of these bills are bad legislation that expands government; creates more government spending; grants special favors to special interests; raises the fees that people must pay; implements costly federal mandates; or, creates loopholes in transparency and good process laws for privileged bureaucracies and government entities.

Many other bills are a complete waste of time, such as the completely unneeded busy work that gives lobbyists a means for convincing their employers to keep them on the payroll; it's a big plaything, a joke on the unfortunate taxpayer who pays for the lobbyists and legislators to play their costly game.

A good lawmaker will understand this and he vote "no" numerous times.

A weak lawmaker is afraid to hit his red button.

The latter, through his weakness, repeatedly betrays the values of the voters and sides with the lobbyists and the bureaucrats who write many of the bad bills.

Marven Goodman has proven that he is not weak.

John Pfeiffer, with his 2023 record of voting "No" just 1.65% of the time, has demonstrated that he is incredibly weak.

We can not allow this to continue.

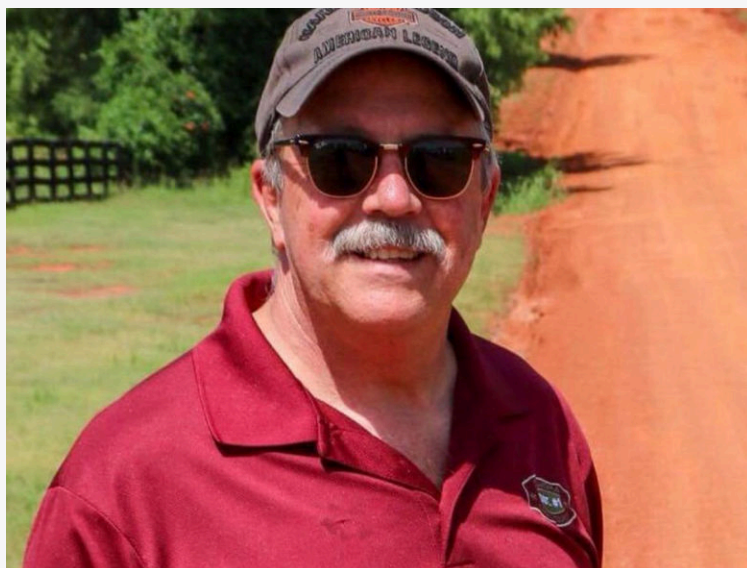

If we don't stop woke now, it will destroy the public education system in Oklahoma.

Defend the right to life of the unborn: Pro-abortion forces are very likely to launch an offensive in Oklahoma.

That's because, as radical, pro-abortion policies are sweeping the nation, we are likely to become the last line of defense in the battle for life.

We have to prepare for this attack by electing principled leaders, who are ready for the attack and, importantly, who won't take lobbyist money or be bought off by the special interests who view our protection of life law as an embarrassment to the state.

Stop corporate welfare giveaways: John Pfeiffer has regularly supported massive corporate welfare giveaways.

This is the immoral practice by which politicians are creating a state-managed economy where the politicians decide who wins and loses in the free market.

In Pfeiffer's new era of "corporate welfare on steroids," the average taxpayer picks up the tab, while the massive, woke, multinational corporation makes bank.

Pfeiffer's Windfall: Pfeiffer and the Toxic Turbine Trouble

The wind industry has poured thousands into Pfeiffer's campaign; now Pfeiffer seeks to waive liability for potentially toxic, turbine-related forever chemicals.

Driven by mainstream culture's misguided climate change ideology and an incorrect understanding of actual environmentalism, state and federal governments have funneled billions in subsidies into industrial wind turbine farms without realizing the true impact of this unproven technology.

As the first generation of wind turbines begins to age, we're seeing the emergence of wind turbine graveyards. These sites, filled with massive fiberglass blades, mar the landscape, challenging recyclers with their sheer volume and material complexity.

On March 12th, 2024, John Pfeiffer won initial house passage of his House Bill 2305.

It would limit the liability for disposing of turbine parts in landfills, a clear indication that there's widespread concern about the potential environmental ramifications and a desire to let those responsible for the contamination escape some of their potential liability to the people of Oklahoma.

Here's the concern: Those turbine blades are known to give off microplastic shedding. The shed particles contain Bisphenol-A, an endocrine disruptor and neurotoxin.

To minimize this shedding, the blades are repeatedly coated with toxic PFAS, non-degradable, dangerous forever chemicals.

These chemicals are also known to leak from turbines and then, perhaps, into water supplies.

And, you guessed it: The wind industry has poured thousands and thousands of dollars into Pfeiffer's campaign fund.

This provides just one more illustration of why abstinence from lobbyist money is the best policy.

We shouldn't ever need to worry about politicians waiving liability for those who may be about to toxify our water supplies because we suspect that they have been influenced by so much money.

EVERY ROAD A TOLL ROAD

John Pfeiffer has already supported the controversial plan to turn every Oklahoma road into a toll road. As a lame duck, he will be free to support the plan again, when it returns for its next vote, without worrying about the views of the voters. We mustn't give him that opportunity.

It was one of the most consequential votes in the recent history of the legislature: HB 1712, the plan to literally convert every Oklahoma road into a toll road. And John Pfeiffer betrayed our values by being on the wrong side of history.

Known as the Road User Fee, or Track-and-Tax, the plan, funded by the Biden Department of Transportation and various special interest groups, would use new tracking technologies to monitor every mile we drive and charge us a fee for each mile. In essence, it would turn every Oklahoma road into a toll road.

This plan is part of a nationwide effort to grant the government new, stringent control over commuter movements. Oklahoma is a prime target for early adoption due to its extensive centerline toll miles—a disastrous and embarrassing legacy left by corrupt politicians of years past.

One can only begin to imagine the potential abuses of giving the government access to our travel data and the potential for them to assess variable rate taxation/tolling based on our travel habits.

Do you drive an old, gas-powered car that isn't "good for the environment?" Then maybe you will pay more for each mile that you drive.

Are you driving too many miles this month? Then maybe your rate will increase to discourage you from driving so much.

Did you travel to a gun show? Then, the FBI and ATF might just target you under their latest, expansive, new interpretation of "red flag" laws to take away your 2nd Amendment rights.

Or, maybe you will want to cross state lines or even attend church during the next national health emergency shutdown. Now, the government will know about it.

All of these abuses are possible, and many more that we can only imagine.

Anyone who knows Marven Goodman will tell you that he possesses a natural, healthy skepticism of new government programs, and he would never vote to create or advance a program such as this; but, unfortunately, our current term incumbent representative, John Pfeiffer, did.

When Pfeiffer voted for HB 1712, he voted to create phase one of the plan: the pilot program to test the feasibility of the plan.

His vote, and the vote of other "Republican" legislators, gave life to the track-and-tax plan in Oklahoma.

And, anyone who learned from the wisdom of President Reagan would have known that, once the new government program was born, it would now be very hard to put the genie back in the bottle and stop it; or, as Reagan explained, "a government bureau is the nearest thing to eternal life we'll ever see on this earth!"

Phase one, the pilot program, wrapped up in December.

At that time, they released

In 1932, Oklahoma Governor Alfalfa Bill Murray, also known as "The Sage of Tishomingo," and the father of the Oklahoma Constitution, declared martial law, deployed the National Guard, and defied a federal judge's order. Murray successfully fought to keep a toll-free bridge open between Oklahoma and Texas.

Murray, a constitutional scholar, based his actions on his study of The Constitution.

Today, weak Oklahoma politicians, including John Pfeiffer, have advanced legislation that uses Biden Administration money in implementing the plan that has one clear outcome: converting every Oklahoma road into a toll road.

Marven Goodman wants to return to the era when strong Oklahoma leaders defended the common man against the elitist overreach of the federal government and its ever-encroaching surveillance state.

We must replace the weak, childish leaders who are putting everything we value at risk.

an official report. The report shows that phase two, "voluntary" participation, is expected to come before the legislature in 2025, after the election, when Pfeiffer can again vote for the plan and not have to worry about the harm done to the voters because he will be a lame duck, term-limited, free to do whatever he wants without needing to worry about re-election.

We can expect that the full weight of the massive transportation bureaucracy, along with the powerful, well-funded transportation interest groups will be brought to bear on the legislators, who, anxious to keep their special interest funding going, are likely to once again vote to support the plan.

After phase two, we can look to Oregon to see what likely comes next for us: "mandatory participation."

Oregon, like Oklahoma, started with a pilot program, not unlike the one supported by Pfeiffer, and now their Legislature has been considering forcing mandatory participation for all vehicles of a certain year and later and adopting a progressive pricing model that assesses charges based on the time of day and distance traveled. In other words, their lawmakers are already at work crafting the plan to control when and how far you drive.

We must stop this plan in its tracks.

On June 18th, we must replace Pfeiffer, someone who had the bad judgment to support this plan, and might do it again, with Marven Goodman, a principled conservative who would never give the government access to our vital information such as travel data, who opposes the toll road concept, and who will oppose the track-and-tax plan when it comes back to the Legislature for another vote in 2025.
